Cornbread Learns a Painful Lesson!
Good News Gus Reporting!

Good morning, friends! This is Good News Gus with another report from Shepherd Sam's Farm!

I just received some news from Shepherd Sam about his farm friend, Cornbread the Donkey.

Yesterday started as one of those beautiful summer afternoons. The sun was shining, the birds were singing, and our good friend Cornbread the Donkey was happily munching on the fresh green grass growing along the fence line.

After eating nearly all afternoon, Cornbread decided it was time for a little rest.

"I believe I'll just sit down right here," he thought.

Unfortunately...Cornbread didn't look before he plopped down!

Hidden beneath him was a busy little bubble bee gathering pollen from the tiny wildflowers nearby. The bee wasn't bothering anyone. It was simply doing the job God created it to do.

When Cornbread sat down...STING!

The surprised bee gave Cornbread one quick sting right on his bottom!

"HEE-HAW!" Cornbread brayed. That's donkey language for, "That smarts!"

Cornbread jumped so high he nearly kicked the clouds! His loud braying echoed all across Shepherd Sam's Farm. Hearing all the commotion, Major the Colt came galloping across the pasture.

Then Cornbread looked around and spotted the little bee buzzing away toward another flower.

By evening, Cornbread was feeling much better, although everyone noticed he looked very carefully before sitting down for the rest of the day.

Sometimes even a little sting can teach us a big lesson! Now Cornbread always looks first before he sits down.
